Marble Prints

All great early civilizations memorialized their cultural, spiritual and social ideas, and history by carving into stone. As a kid, I was fascinated by these cultures and wanted to become an archaeologist which gives some explanation to the pictographic work I create.

Instead of carving into stone, I now carve into paint but was always curious to make work like the ancients did, in stone. By harnessing technology with this ancient expression, I have created these marble carvings using a laser to draw the lines into stone.

I refer to them as “fragments” and as “prints” as they utilize an engraving process similar to classical prints on paper.

“The deeply personal symbolism of Smith’s art sets it apart from the detached approach of many of his contemporaries who appropriated images in a deadpan or ironic fashion.”
