

STEVEN DOBBIN

Steven Dobbin is a sculptor working in lead, copper, and steel with plaster and pigment. Residing in western Maryland, he received degrees from Indiana University, The University of Southern California, and George Washington University in Fine Arts, Ceramics, and Education. Since 2006, he has taught at Frederick High School in Frederick, Maryland where he started a program to teach life skills to intellectually disabled students and was named special educator of the year in Frederick County.

His conceptually based creations have appeared in group exhibitions at the Glenview Mansion, Rockville, Maryland; The Bridge Art Fairs in Chicago, New York and London; the Delaplaine Visual Arts Center, the Artist's Gallery and the Blue Elephant Studios in Frederick, Maryland; the Artist's Museum in Washington DC; the Los Angeles Municipal Art Gallery, Occidental College, The University of Southern California in Los Angeles, Pasadena Armory Center for the Arts; the Heritage Museum; and the Meyers/Bloom Gallery, Santa Monica, California.

Dobbin has been published in the Arlington Connection, Washington Post, The Frederick Gazette, Channel 51, and the Los Angeles Times. His sculptures are in numerous collections throughout the United States and the UK.

Steven Dobbin's work reflects the artist's concerns for the emotionally disturbed students he teaches and for their uncertain futures.
